

PARADIGM . . . explanation by example After the end of the nuclear war that almost completely devastated the world, the magnetic axis of the planet start to shift . . . causing terrible earthquakes everywhere. Islands begin to sink into the oceans and whole countries are being torn apart and inundated. Slowly at first, which soon turns into a daily occurrence. Ray Cathmore builds a large raft for his family hoping to survive the breaking up of the North American Continent and the deluge that will certainly follow. He and his wife Louise start another civilization on a new continent that has risen from the ocean depths, using their knowledge learned from the old world. As North America is being ripped apart, Royce Paxton and his crew on board the spaceship, Dolphin, leave for an extended voyage, beyond this solar system. They are looking for a habitable planet, much like Earth, and to test Einsteins theory of time, traveling at the speed of light. Royce sets course for the Alpha Centauri Star System. When they return to Earth only a few years later, they find that the magnetic resonance of the planet have changed and that there are now only two continents in the entire world. And on one of these, they find a very primitive, almost savage-like people. Although it is apparent that at some time, they had a somewhat knowledgeable society. As the Dolphin craft is leaving, the leader of this primitive group of people returns to their dwelling and draws a picture, using charcoal from the fire, on the cave wall, of this strange looking craft. Scientists have now proven that the Earths axis has shifted many times throughout the history of our world. Are earlier explorers only now returning to find that we have regressed? PARADIGM.
