

Peanuts, Popcorn & American Presidents

Whoever wants to know the heart and mind of America had better learn baseball, wrote Jacques Barzun, the late French-born historian of American culture. Barzun might have added that any U.S. politician with his eye on the White House had better know the difference between a ball and a strike. Since baseball became the National Pastime it has enjoyed a favored relationship with the seats of power in Congress and even in the Supreme Court, but certainly with the chief executive. The venerable sportswriter Ray Robinson here surveys the presidential attitude toward the best game since the early twentieth century, separating the enthusiasts from the pretenders. ----- Ray Robinson, a former magazine editor, is the author of the widely acclaimed biography Iron Horse: Lou Gehrig in His Time as well as biographies of Knute Rockne, Christy Mathewson, Will Rogers, and Stan Musial. His writings appear frequently in the New York Times. He lives in New York City.
